BOYCOTT DEFENDED

Samuel Gompers Before the Industrial Commission.

RESUMPTION OF HIS TESTIMONY

Benefits Claimed to Be Result of Strikes.

USE OF UNION LABELS

Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the Federation of Labor, was before the industrial commission today. In July Mr. Gompers began his testimony, which was continued today.

Mr. Gompers told the commission in regard to the use of union labels, thirty-seven of which are used in various trades. He guaranteed to people who demand them that those who do work stamped with them have better pay, shorter hours and labor under more sanitary conditions than in shops without the label. In the clothing business it guaranteed that clothing bearing it was made by adults, under good sanitary conditions in factories and not in homes of the workers. The label is becoming so popular, he said, that where they were formerly printed by the hundred thousand they are today printed by the millions.

Mr. Gompers at some length defended the boycott as a right and a necessary weapon of labor. He said that while some people didn't like to pronounce that word, he had no such feeling, and he justified it as a proper means in the hands of workmen to obtain their rights.

The witness took the ground that a man has a right to threaten to do anything he has a right to do, and in threatening a boycott a labor union was acting within the bounds of what was legitimate. If a man had a right to take his patronage from a dealer, a number of them had a right to do so. And no one had a vested right in the patronage of individuals. There was no federal or state law forbidding the use of the boycott.

The Cleveland Boycott.

The street car strike of Cleveland several months ago had involved a boycott against all people who rode in the boycotted cars. He said he did not know whether he would have gone so far as that in the boycott, but he would not have ridden in the boycotted cars.

The Cleveland car men were organized when they began the strike because of generally, and after they struck they applied to the witness for a charter for a union, which was refused them under the provisions of the law of that city.

Advances Obtained by Strikes.

The hours of labor and wages of street car employees have been improved during the past few years. Formerly it was common for men to get $1.25 a day for fifteen or sixteen hours' work. Now they get from $2 to $2.50.

The improvements have been secured, he said, except through the influence of strikes. The influence of unions had also brought about the reduced rate to protect the motor car and conductor. Every day they struck they got new men's eyes had been frozen, and at times cars had to be stopped until their eyes could be thawed out.
